

6 Ways To Tell If Your Home Needs A Deep Cleaning

There are stains on your appliances

Old food splatters and grime inside your appliances pose significant risks as they can grow mold and bacteria. A food poisoning hazard is certainly a sign you need a complete cleaning.

It's difficult to find things

Things (small objects especially) can be harder to find in messy places. So, if you are having more trouble finding your car keys or TV remote lately, it's decluttering time!

Critters start to appear

Pests love small and grimy spaces where they can crawl and feast. Cockroaches and flies inside your house are the definitive sign that something needs to be cleaned ASAP.

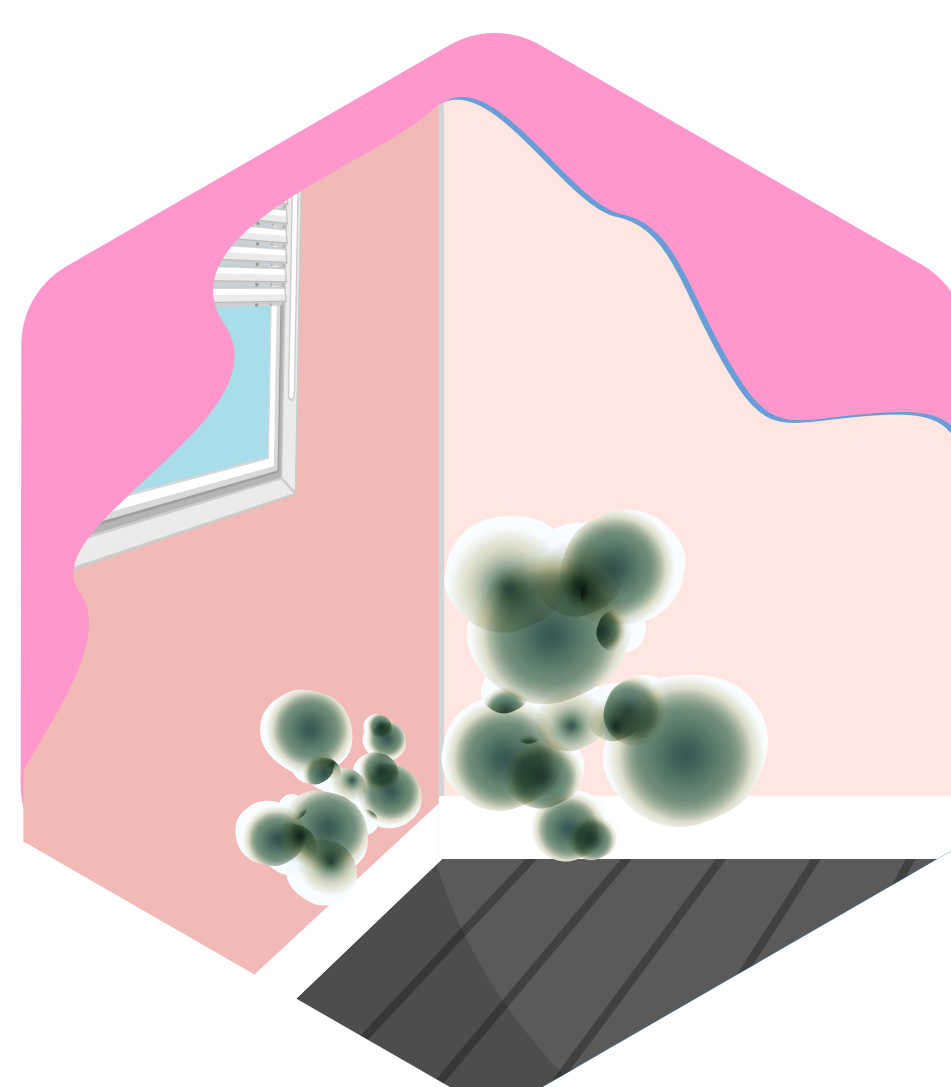

Frequent allergies and sneezing

If you find yourself constantly sneezing at home, it could mean there's too much dust and dirt in the air. Allergies acting up could mean thorough vacuuming is needed.

Your house smells funny

Foul odors can seep through the house even if it looks clean. The source could be inside vents, behind furniture, or ingrained in carpets, calling for an urgent deep cleaning.

Mold begins to grow

Mold usually thrives in humid environments, but it takes time to grow and be noticeable. Finding mold in any place in your house might mean you have skipped cleaning duties for too long.
